Nakissa,

I hope that Charlotte's response is sufficient for now. Please try and disengage yourself from further communications with Ms. Scranton at the present time and let OC deal with it.

Let me know if you have any questions or concerns.

Linda

Please advise on how you wish to proceed with the email below.

I have told Ms Scranton that we are working on a response to her question. I contacted Charlotte Christin from OC, twice, and she responded after the second time, to let me know that I would hear back from Latasha. I have heard nothing yet. I have contacted in the past Jennifer Thomas, specifically because the issue of formaldehyde use in cosmetics needed to be addressed, at least from the labeling perspective, and in order to close out the investigation. In the absence of a close out, we cannot issue a consumer alert. In fact the idea of a consumer alert was recently dismissed, in favor of an update to our webpage, so that the media might not get alerted. The bottom line is that we had not received from the manufacturer, a satisfactory warning statement in response to the Brazilian blowout warning letter. At this point, we have to address the email below, and I am not sure what the office/center/agency wishes to do to respond. Please advise. Thank you.

Hi Nakissa,

Just wanted to give you a heads up. In light of the recent 60 Minutes report on formaldehyde in Lumber Liquidators flooring we are feeling compelled to further highlight problems with formaldehyde in other products while these concerns have a high profile in the press and with the public. We plan to release this graphic on Brazilian Blowout (draft attached) later this week.

We were hoping to have a response to our earlier questions from the FDA before we released it. If there is a response from FDA, please let us know by the end of the day tomorrow (Wed) and we can
